Computer Lab Policy for Internet Users

The Internet is a global computer network composed of millions of contributing networks that support thousands of information systems around the world. Users have access to:

♦ Communication through electronic mail with other users around the world.
♦ Information and news from public and private organizations.
♦ Information from college and university library catalogs.

Enjoy using the Internet, but please follow the policy of the computer lab regarding its use.

1. I understand the primary purpose of access to any information through the Internet should be to support classroom learning (i.e. research papers, projects.)

2. I agree not to participate in the transfer of inappropriate or illegal materials through the Internet.
    - Illegal activities are defined as a violation of local, state, and/or federal law.

3. I agree not to download any software or information through the Internet.

4. I agree not to purchase or sell anything over the Internet.

5. I agree not to participate in chat rooms.

6. I agree not to print without permission.

7. I realize that use of the Internet is a privilege, not a right. I accept that inappropriate use will lead to my losing that privilege.

By signing and dating in the spaces below, it is assumed that you understand and will abide by the IEL Policy for Internet Users.
